And with a multi-time crackrar Â£5.The Silicon Valley venture capital firm Atomico has revealed that its investors include Microsoft founder Bill Gates and Skype founder Niklas Zennstrom. But it has also promised not to invest in any projects "on which the European Union has patents that are infringed" by the company. This was a response to a legal complaint made in the European Commission, which claims that Microsoft "has systematically infringed" patents held by companies in Ireland and the U.K. Atomico also said it's committed to the EU's ruling that "any patent holder has the right to seek enforcement of its patent rights." Atomico's head of communications, Kieran-Allan Jordan, wouldn't comment on Atomico's investors. But he told the BBC: "The really interesting bit is that they can invest in companies in Europe and then collect their return at a later date. What we have said is that we will only invest in companies where the innovation is happening in Europe." Jordan went on to say that Atomico has become active in more than 25 European countries. It invests in companies developing enterprise and infrastructure software, he said. Atomico, which was formerly known as Applied AI, said it has invested more than $100 million in European companies. The commission is currently investigating Microsoft's alleged "participation" in an international conspiracy to infringe on key European telecommunications patents held by eNovance, Alcatel-Lucent, Ericsson and Siemens. eNovance is based in Ireland and has a software development operation in London. But Microsoft officials have said that the company doesn't agree that the commission's findings are accurate, and that its activities in the European Union are legal
