Diabetes mellitus is a chronic metabolic disease that is characterized by hyperglycemia and hyperlipidemia. Recent studies have shown that type 2 diabetes (T2DM) is associated with lipid peroxidation, inflammation, and formation of advanced glycation end products (AGEs). Menaquinone-4 (MK4), a bioactive form of vitamin K in the human body, has been shown to have anti-diabetic, anti-atherogenic, and anti-inflammatory properties. We conducted a randomized, single-blind, placebo-controlled trial to evaluate the effect of MK4 supplementation for 6 months on insulin sensitivity, serum lipids, inflammatory markers, and AGEs in T2DM patients. Fifty-nine subjects aged 19 to 80 years were recruited; their mean ± SD age was 56.9 ± 7.8 years. During the trial, the subjects were given dietary supplementation with 120 μg MK4/d, 500 μM MK4/d, or placebo as capsules or powder for 6 months. At baseline, the subjects were randomly assigned to three groups. After 6 months, body weight, waist circumference, fat mass, and insulin sensitivity were significantly reduced in the MK4 groups, and the fasting serum glucose was significantly reduced in the 500 μM MK4 group (p = 0.001). The MK4 groups
