The present disclosure relates to a semiconductor light emitting device which has a light emitting portion of a compound semiconductor as a light emitting element. A light emitting diode (LED) as an example of a semiconductor light emitting device is a pn junction type or a double hetero junction type. Since a crystal substrate used for a GaAs-based LED is a single crystal, its manufacturing cost is high. Especially, when the amount of light of the light emitting diode is to be increased, the output power from a chip is increased, and a diameter of the chip is increased. The diameter of the chip is increased, and the manufacturing cost is high. On the other hand, a method in which a light emitting diode is made by using a sapphire substrate as a base substrate is disclosed (for example, refer to Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. Hei 10-234683). In the light emitting diode, the sapphire substrate is used as a base substrate, and a high-reflectance layer and a front conductive layer are formed on a surface of the sapphire substrate as the base substrate. The sapphire substrate is separated by scribing or laser processing, and a silicon layer is formed on the front surface of the sapphire substrate. Then, the silicon layer as a front conductive layer of the light emitting diode, a compound semiconductor layer composed of a nitride or an oxide as a light emitting layer, an ins
