This invention relates to a process for preparing hydroxymethylbenzyl ether (HMBE) by reacting the benzyl alcohol containing aqueous solution with formaldehyde in the presence of a catalyst at a temperature of 20-150.degree. C. The HMBE product obtained in the process has the following characteristic properties. (1) It has excellent stability against hydrolysis and oxidation. PA1 (2) It has an effective utilization rate and recyclability. PA1 (3) It has a high boiling point and a low viscosity. PA1 (1) For example, an HMBE solution containing one tenth of water by weight is obtained when using about 0.1 mol/l of formaldehyde to form an HMBE solution having 20% by weight of benzyl alcohol. PA1 (2) The reaction proceeds smoothly under a low concentration condition of HMBE. PA1 (3) The HMBE solution obtained by the process is less colored, with a low color value and a low content of impurities such as methanol, ammonium and organic impurities. PA1 (1) Formaldehyde is used in an amount of 0.3-0.7 mol/l per mole of benzyl alcohol. PA1 (2) An HMBE solution containing one tenth of water by weight is obtained. The reaction of benzyl alcohol with formaldehyde in the presence of a catalyst has been known for a long time. According to the literature as early as 1970, Kawai et al. described the process of reacting benzyl alcohol with formaldehyde in aqueous media in the presence of strong acid ion-exchange resins (see "Kobunshi Ronbunshi, Vol. 14, pages 94-98, 1970). The reaction of benzyl alcohol with formaldehyde in the presence of acidic inorganic catalysts (e.g. Sulfuric acid, phosphoric acid) and a cation exchange resin (e.g. sulfonated styrene-divinylbenzene type) has also been known 50b96ab0b6

First, he had to back-track on a statement of principle: that the government would not try to make the poorest in society pay more than the rich. And now, in a row over tax cuts, he has had to clarify that, yes, he did indeed speak to someone from Google – even though it’s clear the chief executive he was talking to did not offer him the chance to delay the next cut. Heck. This “government” seems to think it has no responsibility to the public, or even to those who it claims to serve. Anyone else would be fired. IDS may well have been speaking off the record – but he should not have said anything at all. And because he did, he may now face a fusillade of criticism. Perhaps he’d rather people had no idea how he spends his time. But it is the Conservative party’s opposition to people knowing what they’re paying in tax that is so extraordinary. It’s one thing to be unaware of something – but quite another to be lying about it. Most people with a conscience believe there should be a cap on how high the top rate of income tax should be. The general feeling, though, is that the rich should be taxed more. So if IDS was given the chance to delay the tax cut for the least well off, would he have done so? Who can say? But the fact he has had to defend himself shows that the opposition to such a move is not popular. It’s fairly obvious that taxes should be cut for the most well-off. In this country, the expectation is that the more you
