A review of sports-related personal injury: The incidence of injury in adolescent, collegiate, and elite athletes in the United States. Sports-related injuries represent a major cause of morbidity in adolescent and collegiate athletes, and may result in disfigurement and functional impairment. The purpose of this review is to increase awareness of sports-related injuries among medical professionals and athletes and promote understanding of the extent of injury in young athletes. A PubMed search was performed to identify studies investigating youth and collegiate athletes that had reported the number and type of sports-related injuries in the United States. Data were synthesized and pooled for subgroup analysis, including age, gender, and sport. Injuries sustained by U.S. collegiate, high school, and youth athletes were also analyzed. A total of 988 studies were identified that met the inclusion criteria. One-third of studies were retrospective studies, and several of the reviewed studies had limitations. There was a clear increase in the number of injuries reported in each age group from youth athletes to collegiate athletes. There was a difference in the incidence of injury between genders, with boys having a higher rate of injury. The sport with the highest injury rate was football, representing 32.0% of sports-related injuries among all three age groups. There were several deficiencies within these studies and other investigations. The findings of this review suggest that sports-related injuries are important causes of morbidity in youth and collegiate athletes, and that they appear to increase with age. The type and rates of injury vary by gender and sport, with men having a higher rate of injury. There was insufficient information to make a clear determination of the injury rate among youth athletes./ * Panther is a Cloud-Native SIEM for the Modern Security Team. * Copyright (C) 2020 Panther Labs Inc * * This program is free software: you can redistribute it and/or modify * it under the terms of the GNU Affero General Public License as * published by the Free Software Foundation, either version 3 of the * License, or (at your option) any later version. * * This program is distributed in the hope that it will 6d1f23a050
