The San Diego County District Attorney filed a misdemeanor protective order against YouTube star Steven Crowder Monday in the same week that Crowder declared himself a "neo-Nazi" in a tweet attacking a transgender teen. I am neo-Nazi pic.twitter.com/ixb50ejCXO — Steven Crowder (@scrowder) May 2, 2019 The document represents the culmination of a weeks-long legal battle that began last week when a conservative YouTube personality used the rape and death of a transgender teenager as a political platform. "We are all taught to empathize with the victim," San Diego County Deputy District Attorney Farrah Emami said at the time, adding the victim's family wanted to "bring justice" to the situation. This site is protected by recaptcha The district attorney's office requested and received a protective order against Crowder for criminal threats and harassment, as well as retaliation against those who step forward in support of the transgender victim of a hate crime, according to CNN. The criminal threats — which are illegal under California law — stem from a June 15 appearance on The O'Reilly Factor in which Crowder made fun of the transgender teen, saying, "Do you have a nightmare about being raped by a ghost? That happens to people in China," according to KNSD-TV. According to the report, Crowder called the transgender teen at her home shortly after the interview aired and asked to discuss the case. The teen's mother refused. Crowder then told the mother to "grow a pair," resulting in the protective order. Emami told the San Diego Union Tribune that it had been "a nightmare" to deal with the situation. "We never thought he 6d1f23a050
