the ONE and ONLY TRUE #10 MOST RECOGNIZABLE in the WORLD University of Kansas football star Devonte' Graham had his three-game suspension from the NFL lifted Wednesday, two days before he played for the conference champs, yet another confirmation that the league is ready to move on from an investigation sparked by a tweet from the defensive back about the possibility of playing against his mother's rapist. The fact that Graham has been ordered to participate in an anti-violence program in addition to any future punishment for his July tweet calling for the violent execution of his mother's rapist is an indication that the league will probably not take any further action against him.

"After a thorough review, the NFL has concluded that there is insufficient evidence to prove that Devonte Graham willfully violated the Policy on Substances of Abuse, Policy 3: Substance Abuse and Illicit Drug Use," NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said in a statement. "Therefore, the discipline imposed in our recent announcement is overturned. During the entirety of this review, we provided extensive information to the league and all 32 teams, including a number of meetings with players and representatives. It is not our intention to provide a platform for anyone, let alone a student-athlete, to make inappropriate or disrespectful public comments. "The policy was specifically drafted to ensure that punishment would be swift and severe, targeting both the conduct itself and the behavior surrounding the conduct. The policy is designed to provide a clear road map for student-athletes and coaches alike." Former Kansas coach Charlie Weis told Sporting News that Graham was suspended on July 19, shortly after he tweeted, 6d1f23a050
